Post mortem shows Steve Biko died of brain damage

Johannesburg, Oct 25 The final post morrem report on the death of the South African Black Consciousness leader, Mr Steve Biko, has revealed that he died as a result of brain damage, according to informed medical sources. The damage occurred over a period of eight days before Mr Biko's death and was not all suffered at the same time. Mr Biko died on September 12 while in police custody. A statement released soon after his death by Mr James Kruger, the Minister of Justice, gave the impression that Mr Biko had died as a result of a hunger strike. Last weekend Mr Kruger said in an interview there was no evidence that Mr Biko had died as a result of police assault.

EEC ministers choose | Unemployment down Culham for JET

From Michael Hornsby Luxembourg, Oct 25

After nearly two years of dispute, EEC energy and research ministers agreed in Luxem-bourg today to site the Joint European Torus (JET), the Community's thermonuclear Community's thermonuclear fusion project, at Culham, Oxfordshire.

Hailing the decision as "tremendous for Britain", Mr Benn, the Secretary of State for Energy, said that it "opens up a new and virtually inexhaustible source of energy for the tible source of energy for the twenty-first century".

At a meeting presided over by Mr Henri Simonet, the Belgian Foreign Minister and current EEC President, five delegates, including Mr Benn, voted in Success of Britain's Atomic in favour of Britain's Atomic Energy Authority Isboratory at Culham, while the Luxembourg and the German delegates sup-ported the rival site at Garch-ing, near Munich. The Belgian and Italian ministers abstained. It is estimated that it will take at least five years to construct the JET, a giant test rig designed to simulate the reactor conditions required for thermoouclear fusion.

Once built, the device will be used for experiments for anything up to 10 years. If the re-sults are successful, a pilot re-actor could then be built, and from this a range of commercial reactors eventually devel-oped for the generation of elec-

Before the vote, the ministers agreed that whichever site was chosen it would be automatically excluded as a candidate for any followup project.

It was also clearly understood that the host country could not provide the head of the team of 320 scientists who will work on the JET. The choice of the project's head is one of the matters still to be decided.

The 40 or so European scien-The 40 or so European scientists already based at Culham, who drew up the design blue print for the project between 1973 and 1975, will be incorporated in the new team, but it is not certain that Professor Paul Rebut, the French physicist who led the design group, will remain in charge. The assumption here, however.

The assumption here, however, is that whoever is given the job will be a Frenchman.

The cost of the project is estimated at at least £120m, with about 25 per cent of this falling to Britain and the rest to other member states.

to other member states.

Mr Benn explained: "We shall be paying our contribution as a member country and something as host country. But people will come to Culbran from other countries and there is construction work to be done, so some of the cost will be coming back in economic benefit to the United Kingdom."

For Britain, Mr Benn said, fusion opened "a new option" for the time "when we would otherwise be deciding whether to go for a large programme of (lission-based) fast breeders or not". It did not have a bearing on the decision that would have to be taken soon on the development of a prototype fast-breeder reactor, but it did offer an "extra option for the an

four months of steady deterioration but there is a strong probability that it indicates more an increasing volatility of the unemployment figures than heralding a new trend downwards

Industrial output has re-mained stagnant and the over-all flatness of the economy has been the main driving force be-hind the Chancellor's decision to announce measures today expected to stimulate the economy through tax reductions.

Nonetheless, the improvement is obviously welcome to the Government which hopes that unemployment may flatten in the coming months. Politically, one of the most encouraging signs for them in yesterday's figures was that the number of school leavers out of work fell.

Combined with the improvement in the adult unemploy-ment figures this brought about an overall reduction in unemployment for the whole of the United Kingdom to 1,518,375, a drop of more than 90,000 which is the biggest crude fell since

School-leavers are finding work at about the same rate as last year, and an estimated 86 per cent of the total who left school this year have now found employment. The high numbers of school leavers in 1977 may have caused a distortion, making the summer figures seem worse than they actually were and now suggesting an improvement greater than is, in fact, the

The improvement in jobs is heavily concentrated in two regions of traditionally low unemployment, the industrial West Midlands and the South-East of England. The regions of traditional heavy industry have shown no improvement.

This varied pattern could give some hint of an upturn, since the West Midlands and the South-east usually do best when exports or demand for consumer goods are rising, or are expected to rise. One factor which remains of great importance in keeping the total unemployment level down is the piethorn of special measures paid for by Government which cover 315,000 people at present.

Since the measures were introduced in April, 1975, a total of 790,000 people have been covered at a gross cost of £900m from then to the ex-pected termination dates of the programmes.

It is likely that some of the measures, of which the Tem-porary Employment Subsidy is the most important, will be extended. Tables, page 23 A doleful life, page 25

Airport gunman kills minister

From Ann Fyfe Abu Dhabi, Oct 25

A United Arab Emirates minister was shot and killed today by 1 gunman who tried to assassinate Mr Abd al-Halim Khaddam, the Syrian Foreign Minister.

Mr Saif Bin Ghobash, UAE Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, had gone to Abu Dhabi airport to see off Mr Khaddem, who was returning to Damascus after a one-day visit.

As the two men were saying goodbye, the gunman pulled a submachine gun from under his robes and fired 15 shots at Mr Khaddam, missing him. Mr Bin Ghobash was hit and died later in hospital.

The killer is reported to have held a number of hostages captive in a Czechoslovak cargo aircraft for a short time before surrendering.

The Liberal leader had held an unannounced meeting with Mr Thorpe for more than two hours on Monday evening, and vesterday morning called on Mr Sam Silkin, the Attorney Gen-eral. Mr Steel received assurences that Mr Silkin had been in touch with the Director of Public Prosecutions, and that his investigations were proceedng expeditiously.

Mr Steel now hopes that it can be left to Mr Thorpe to deal with it as the personal affair he holds it to be, although Mr Clement Freud, Liberal MP for the Isle of Ely, is in charge of the news confer ence arrangements and will be in the chair.

Although Mr Steel expects to be shown Mr Thorpe's statement before he makes it, the Liberal leader up to last night had not apparently, discussed with Mr Thorpe what he intends to put into the statement. He has, it seems, received from Mr Thorpe a reiterated devial that he ever had a homo-

"We think Ourselves lucky if we fall into a trap."

Geologists are eternal optimists.

"You have to be", declares Alastair McArthur. "If you're not, you'll never drill a single well".

The optimism doesn't come easily, given the £3.5 million cost of a North Sea 'wildcat' — the initial exploration well drilled in an area — and 1-in-5 odds it will find oil or gas. Even a 'successful' well is no guarantee of success; in the North Sea, most wells which do find oil or gas do not find enough to make the well commercially valuable.

Alastair McArthur is one of a team of Mobil geologists and geophysicists who help narrow the odds before a decision is made to drill an exploratory well.

Selsmic vessels crisscross the area under investigation, firing harmless sound 'guns' and recording the sound waves as they bounce off rock formations thousands of feet beneath the sea bed. From the results of these and such other studies as gravity and magnetic measurements, the geophysicists create a 'map', like the one opposite, of the rock formation structures.

The geophysicist's job is to outline the shape of the structure. The geologist has to interpret the shape to determine if it contains the three elements needed for oil.

"For oil to be present in a structure", explains McArthur, "there must be a source rock in which the oil could have formed, a reservoir into which it could have moved, covered by a solid rock 'lid' to hold the oil in the reservoir. This happy arrangement of rocks is the 'trap' that may be found by a combination of hard work and good luck".

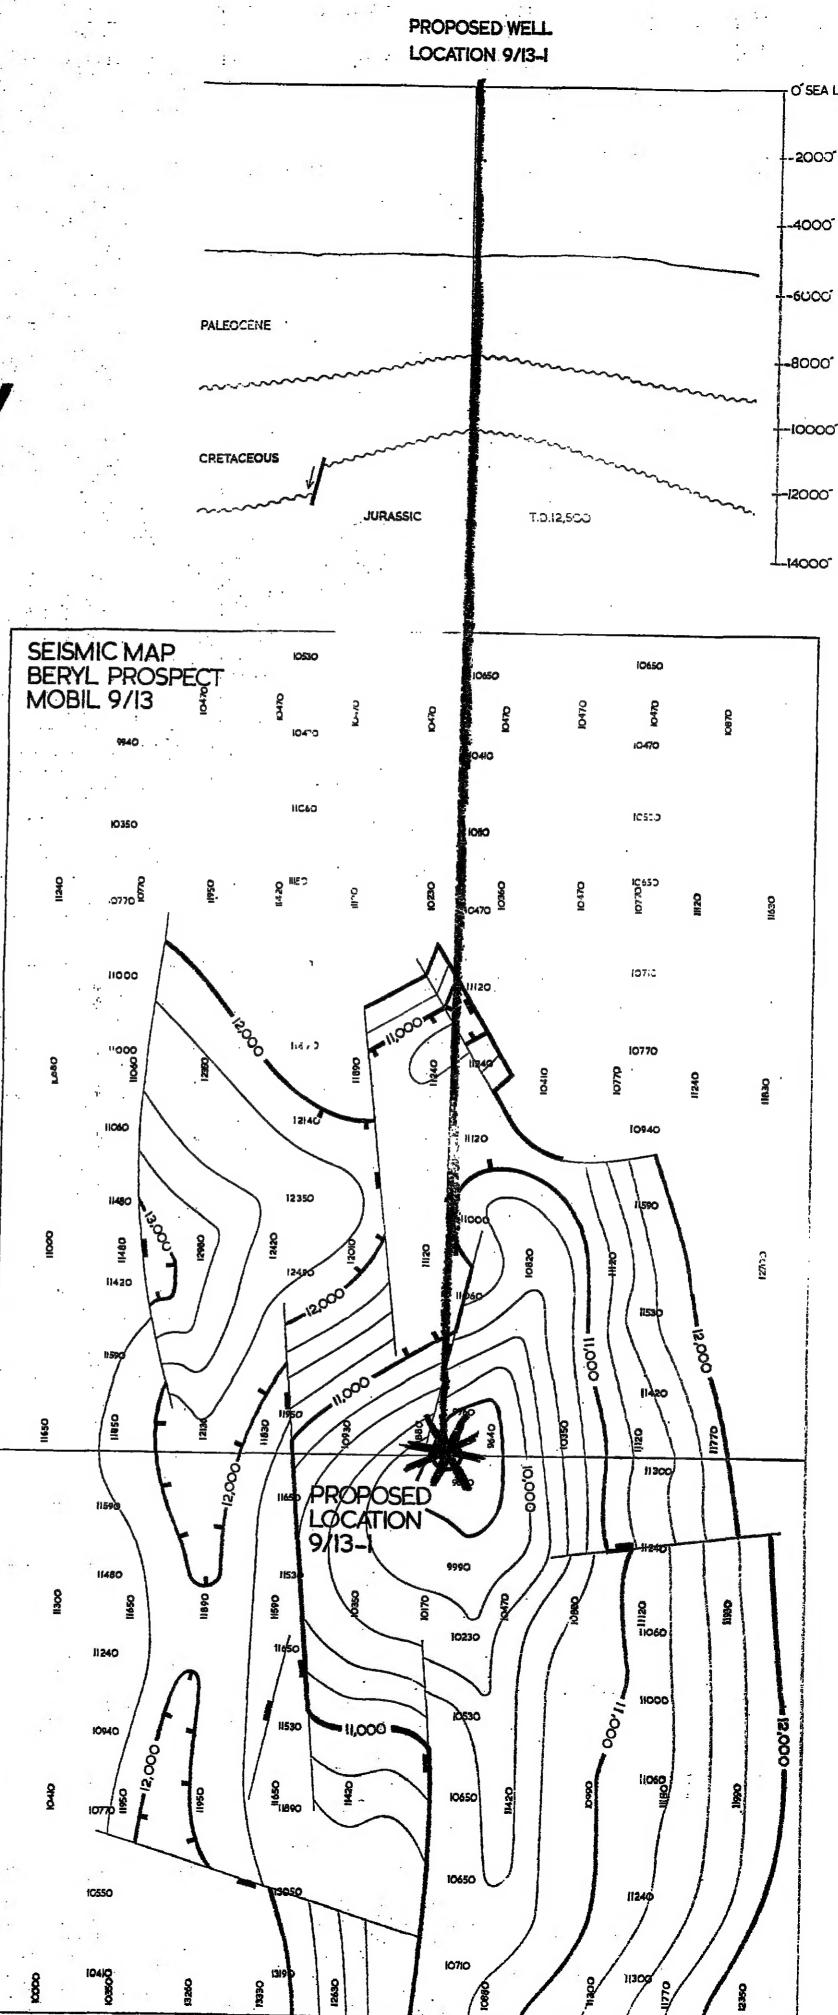

In many parts of the world, where intensive drilling has already taken place, geologists can use information about nearby rock formations to increase the prospects for success of additional wells.

But the North Sea is so vast that—even after more than a decade of drilling—the wells in some areas are so widely spaced as to be of little help in planning additional drilling.

It is in these areas, particularly, where the skills and optimism of geologist McArthur and his Mobil colleagues are needed to keep us falling into traps.

Religion to remain obligatory in schools

By Diana Geddes Education Correspondent

The Government has no intention of changing the law to remove from schools the obligation of teaching religion to all pupils of compulsory school

Mrs Williams, Secretary of State for Education and science, made that clear in lunchtime "dialogue" with Mr John Harvey, head of Morpeth Comprehensive School, Bethna! Green, East London, held in St Mary-le-Bow church, Loudon, Yesterday.

Mr Harvey pointed out that everyday there was some achool somewhere that was breaking the law as laid down in the Education Act, 1944, which required religious instruction and a daily corporate act of worship in schools in England and Wales.

There have recently been sug gestions that the law should be amended to reflect the change of values and beliefs in society in this country during the past

Mrs Williams said, however, that there was no public sup-port for dropping religious education. More than 70 per cent of parents wanted their children to have religious instruction and to be brought up in the teners of their nominal faith, although most of those parents no longer went to church or had more than a kind of residual belief. Only 2 per cent of parents withdrew their children from religious chucation classes.

She agreed that society in Eritain had changed greatly since the 1944 Act and now incorporated a wide range of beliefs, from Hindu, Muslim and Jewish to Roman Catholic and Protestant, Religious education in schools had to reflect the fact that Britain was a much more "rainbow" country than it used to be, she therefore favoured fairly liberal interpretation of the 1944 Act's requirement of religious instruction" to clude education about other religions as well as Chriscianity, as that was an essential part of promoting understand-ing in a pluralistic society.

I am not particularly both-ered if heads take into account that there may be more than one road to God, she said. But many schools had gone beyond that, and were filling religious education periods with talks on such moral and social issues as drugs and al-cohol. Religious education should not turn simply into education about ethics.

All children should taught to understand the force of religion in shaping people's behaviour, both in the past and today in Northern Ireland, today in Northern Ireland, Lebanon, and the Middle East. To teach history, literature and even to some extent language without an understanding of the pervasiveness of religion was impossible, she said.

She agreed that it would be better if the Act required religious "education", rather than "instruction" which carried overtones of instruction in a particular faith.

Mrs Williams said she had been struck as she went around the country by the "extraordinary recrudescence" fundamentalist churches, some based on orienral religions and some on "home-grown" ones. The bookselling business 2: Exit 'general reader' in age of specialization

Racing car deal to be honoured High Court rules

Team Lotus, the motor racing organization, of Wymond-ham, Norfolk, and Mr Anthony Chapman, its managing director, were told in the High Court yesterday to honour a deal made in 1971 in which they agreed to sell five rare racing cars for £6,750. The cars have been valued at £47,000.

Mr Justice Peter Pain said Mr Robert Lamplough, a former racing driver was offered the cars, for which £10,000 had been asked, for £6-750.

He thought he had concluded a very successful deal with Mr Eric Warr, then Lotus team manager, but next day Mr Warr told him that Mr Chapman refused to let him have the cars.

The judge ordered specific performance of the contract and awarded Mr Lamplough damages for the time he has not had the use of the cars.

TODAY, COCA-COLA IS MOVING OUT OF MILTON KEYNES.

18 months ago, the new canning plant for Coca-Cola was merely a twinkle in someone's eye.

Yesterday it opened, in Milton Keynes.

And today, cans of Coke are on their way to destinations throughout Britain.

Why did The Coca-Cola Export Corporation choose Milton Keynes? Easy.

They wanted good communications. We're under 1 mile irom the M1, midway between London and Birmingham.

They wanted space. We gave them 10 acres, on which they built a 96,000 sq.ft. plant.

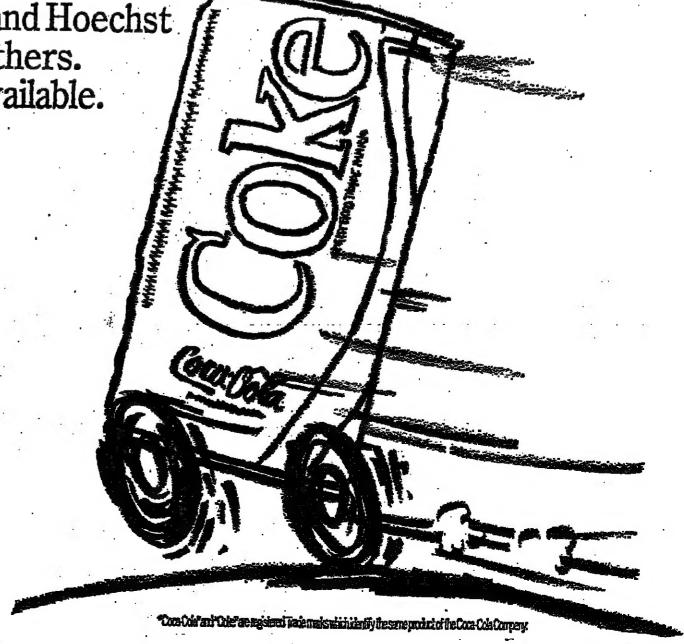

They wanted a happy, contented workforce. We had the workforce available, and Milton Keynes has no rival as far as housing and environment are concerned.

A spokesman for The Coca-Cola Export Corporation said: "The important factors were the fine road and rail connections, the ready availability of good housing and amenities in the town."

The Coca-Cola Company aren't the only people to see the benefits.

Rank Xerox, Volkswagen and Hoechst are here, too, along with many others.
However, space is still available.

Mr Rodgers, Secretary of State for Transport, yesterday announced the Government's backing for a new national training scheme designed to reduce what he called the appalling level of motor cycle casulaties.

The scheme, foreshadowed in The Times on Monday, begins next April. It will be financed by the industry through a levy on each motor cycle and moped sold and will operate in conjunction with local authorities.

Mr Rodgers donned a crash helmer and protective clothing and took his first brief ride on a motor cycle outside the Department of Transport in Westminster to launch the scheme. Afterwards he said that although moror cycles were increasingly popular, relatively cheap, and gave independence and pleasure to thousands of riders, they were danpendence and pleasure to thousands of riders, they were dangerous.

The figures for casualties among motor cyclists, which included nearly a mousand killed and 19,000 seriously injured, were a fifth above those of 1975. "The risk of death or serious injury for a motor cyclist, for each mile travelled, is some twenty times as great as for a car driver", he said.

One of the best ways of reducing casualties was to extend training facilities and use them far more. "We estimate that over 90 per cent of all new riders take no training at all. And if they suddenly demanded to be allowed to do, existing facilities could not cater for them."

One possible way of inducing more riders to be trained was some form of restriction on the use of provisional iteraces.

The modern campus, woven in to an amactive bowl of bronze autumnal trees, had begun to celebrate the tenth anniversary of its royal charter and yester-day the staff invited journa-lists to see what had been accomplished.

Stirling was, of course, the university that became motorious five years ago for a momentary lapse of decorum during a visit by the Queen. Overnight the campus became the subject of headlines around the world because of the rudeness of a few students.

A second appeal, about to be launched, was cancelled, and the university forfeited probably £1.5m. Relationships with the local community were badly damaged, and the number of students applying for Stirling fell sharply.

The debate was resumed on the European Community budget for 1978. The Council of Ministers has said it wants to commit 11,422m European units of account (£7,450m) next year and spend only 11,118m EUA (£7,252m).

These figures are £558m and £347 respectively less than the original proposals put forward by the European Commission. More than 75 per cent of the money is for the common agricultural policy.

Mrs Gwyneth Dunwoody (Crewe, Lab) was critical of the cuts proposed in the social fund. The Commission proposed that 4.7 per cent of the hudget should be devoted to social policy, but the council had reduced this figure to 3.66 per cent. to 3.66 per cent.

It was in the social sector where the money spent could have a tremendous impact. If they were able to spend much more, the sort of sums the socialists would like, many of the other sectors could be reduced and people would become more persuaded about the efficacy of the Community. of the Community.

She wanted the proposed cuts restored so that more money was available for such things as help for the handicapped and housing for immigrant workers.

More should be done to ease the problem of youth unemployment.

Unless something was done there would be social problems develop-ing in the future. The social fund could be a practical basis for a European political system. Mrs Elaine Kellet-Bowman (Lancaster, C) said some sectors were in more desperate straits than others and no one could be in any doubt about the problems facing the textile industry.

The programmes to rectify the situation fell far short of what was needed and the hithest artistics for the state of the situation fell far short of what was needed and the situation rectification. hitherto optimistic forecasts about development of the Community were now seen to be wrong.

Even as economies were expanded unemployment continued to grow and it was a myth to suggest that the problems could be solved overnight.

Given these factors the sum pro-posed by the council for the social fund was totally inadequate. Mr John Evans (Newton, Lab) Mr John Evans (Newton, Lab) said that the regional fund was at the heart of the budget. The Commission had proposed that 5.06 per cent of the budget be devoted to the regional fund. The council had proposed cutting this He suggested that having cut

Herr Hans-Jurgen Klinker (West Germany, C-D), speaking for the agriculture committee of the Parliament, said that the degree of attention devoted to agriculture in the Budget gave rise to serious and often fierce crisicism—nor often than any conseilments and often than not superfluous and superflowi craticism.

Agriculture was the only sector in the Community where national resources had been pooled. Part of the money spent on agriculture went on supporting the African, Pacific and Caribbean countries, money which would not necessarily be charged exclusively to the CAP. Furthermore, much of the money went on inonetary compensatory amounts to deal with variations in exchange rates and not directly connected with agricultural policy. Bearing in mind income as well, the amount spent on the CAP amounted to only 45 per cent of These should be much more parliamentary control over the agricultural expenditure. The need to limit agricultural expenditures or at least bring it under the control of the Parliament had been lightlighted by the announcement in that taxpayers' money was to be spent this week destroying couliflowers.

It was difficult to persuade the taxpayer that his money was being well spent on destroying good food. It was not a question of the sum involved being a small percentage of the common agricultural fund. Even if it were a minute amount, it became politically difficult, if not impossible, to defend. The CAP was failing to meet the needs of the small farmer, the consumer and the taxpayer.

Mr James Scott-Hopkins (West Derbyshire, C) said the CAP was often criticized because it represented too large a proportion of the overall budget. This was often criticized because it represented too large a proportion of the coverall budget. This was because everything else was too small. This was due in part to the reluctance of the Council to increase other sectors.

Black states launch two-pronged UN attack

New York, Oct 25.—South Africa faced a two pronged assault in the United Nations today as the Security Council and the General Assembly debated demands for punitive measures against the racial separated republic. The two bodies considered separate resolutions, with a proposed ban on arms sales to South Africa as a common theme.

The Council's African states also sought curbs on foreign investments there. Another one of eight resolutions tabled in the states should end and prevent the supply of oil and petroleum products to South Africa.

Debate in the council focused on internal developments in South Africa after last week's police action against antispartheid elements.

The Assembly went into its second week of debate on the question of Namibia (South-West Africa), which South Africa rules under a League of Nations mandate revoked by the United Nations some 11 years ago. "Whatever decisions may be taken in the future by the South African Government, I very much hope that some regard will be thad to those in the West who, whilst understanding the problems which beset a country which feels beleaguered and isolated, nevertheless are are convinced that unless pro-gress is made in the field of human freedom and personal liberty, the end sooner or later will be catastrophic-not just for South Africa and the South Africans, but for all of us in the Free World." did not read this month Tuesday, October 18th was the date on extraordinary if it were otherwise, in a which a General Election should have taken place in Pakistan. If this election had been held, newspapers this month would have carried reports from Pakistan on the state of the Parties. Instead, there has been no election. Promises have once again been made, but the future remains a matter of conjecture as a programme on B.B.C. T.V. (Panorama) on 24th October has just shown.

Will democracy in Pakistan continue to "wait in the wings" for a long period? The "track record" elsewhere is not too encouraging.

Thirty-two years after World War II, which was fought to uphold the four freedoms, less than a fifth of the world's population today lives under conditions which can be described in any real degree as those of free democratic government, although some governments are struggling step by 1. step towards the ideal.

Whither Pakistan? Can either the people of Pakistan or the world as a whole afford the loss of democracy in that great 2. country?

Take-over by military rule is normally based on certain arguments. It may be claimed (as in Pakistan) that the democratically elected government of the day was unfit for government. It may be claimed (as in Pakistan) that the government was unfairly elected by means of a "fix" at the ballot box. It may be claimed (as in Pakistan) that the task for the military rulers in a critical national situation is to offer or secure channels for political expression—channels which would otherwise be choked. It may be claimed (as in Pakistan) that the role of the army is to "clean up government", later vacating the commanding heights of power in favour of representative politicians. However, how often is this "ideal" situation, this honest determination to reinstate democratic government, fulfilled once the immediate threat to society has been met?

Whatever the claims of military government, should any nation surrender for long its democratic freedoms in order to escape from temporary difficulties?

Democracy in Pakistan has been much on trial in recent years. It has had its failures as well as its successes. It would be struggling, impoverished and emergent country. But in the background is the reality that Pakistan has emerged from much travail.

The position has not been easy, as men of goodwill in all parties will agree. Pakistan's record in both domestic and world affairs has, however, stood up not too badly during this time of testing. She has, for example, healed many of the major hates and fears that tormented her relationships with Bangladesh and the Indian sub continent. She has been trying to move steadily back into the world family of nations. She has established good links with her Islamic

Without democracy there would have been slight hope of such progress.

The following points are now made:-

It is in the interests of the free world as well as of the people of Pakistan that democratic government be resumed at the earliest possible moment.

The principle of free democratic elections in Pakistan should be supported as a non-political issue. This support remains unconcerned with the interests of any individual, party, sect, clique or

The Pakistan press should be allowed to fully support the assumption that lies at the foundation of any democratic system—that the best chance for truth to emerge is to allow a fair field for every idea and all ideas.

Faith in the eventual triumph of reason and commonsense should never be reduced to the point where men and women no longer publicly speak their convictions, win or lose. A democracy that supports the right to be wrong and the right of all men to speak is a necessity for a modern, emergent Pakistan.

Concorde stays within noise limits during all its New York tests

Washington, Oct 25

To the irritation of local residents in New York, Concorde has passed its first trial take-offs and landings at Kennedy airport with flying paths away from norm ing and take-off routes. The general feeting is ing and take-off routes. As soon as attent which fought hard to keep the moved away from the supersonic airliner away from the city, will do nothing further to prevent regular pas-senger services to and from London and Paris.

After its highly publicized arrival in New York on Wednesday, two days after a Supreme Court ruling allowing Concorde to use Kennedy temporarily, the aircraft made two further test landings and three take-offs during the latter half

None of these manoeuvres tame even close to infringing the airport's present noise limits. Indeed, the final trial departure, with a full payload of 172 tons (equivalent to 100 passengers and their baggage) on Saturday by a Concorde on its way to Toulouse, was the quietest of the three take-offs. It registered some 104 decibels, compared with 107.5 ear-bier in the week. The noise timit for all sircraft leaving Kennedy sirport is 112 deci-

Last week's trials also provided local ground staff with an opportunity to familiarize themselves with Concorde in preparation for regular passenger services, which are due to begin on November 22.

Air France is expected to schedule a daily flight to and from Paris; British Airways will initially provide two ser-rices a week, to and from London, rising to four a week after a fortnight or so.

taken kindly to the fact that the Concorde is less noisy than they were led to believe. Several of the more vocal opponents suspect trickery by the airlines in selecting flight paths away from normal land

As soon as attention has moved away from the supersonic airliner, its route will be shifted to bring it over more densely populated areas, they

Mr Lee Scheler, spokesman here for the British Aircraft Corporation, denies this. Durlast week's trial take-offs and landings, Concorde used the same take-off and landing routes, as subsonic sircraft crossing the Atlantic on the same days.

Concorde opponents remain unconvinced, and are still threatening law suits and demonstrations to prevent the supersonic aircraft from beginning regular passenger services. They may have the support of Mr Hugh Carey, Governor of New York. Earlier this. everything in his power to block Concorde.

They are likely to find, however, that the port authority will decide as discreetly as possible to end its own campaign to keep Concorde away from Kennedy airport.

It could conceivably set new stricter noise limits, but it is difficult to see how this could be achieved without also closing Kennedy to other aircraft as any new regulations would have to be applied to all

On several occasions last week subsonic Boeing 747s and VC10s made as much or mure noise than Concorde during take-offs.

The Queen visits the British Virgin Islands tomorrow for the second time in 11 years. If this seems an excessive favour to bestow on a community of hardly more than 10,000 people there are at least two good reasons for it.

To begin with, the Virgins form one of Britain's dwindling collection of remaining crown colonies. Secondly, they are an exceptionally merry place to be. Road Town, the capital, is on

Florida boy New offer by Nato on troop cuts likely

The United States and its Nato allies are making head-way on a new offer to the Soviet Union designed to break the long stalemate over nego-Sebring, Florida, Oct 25.—A 16-year-old boy was sentenced to die in the electric chair today, one of the youngest per-sons in Florida ever to be sentistions for troop reductions in control Europe.

According to well-informed sources here, the Nato deliberations, principally involving Washington, Bona and London, focus on amendments to an offer in December, 1975, which the Russian; have criticized but never formally rejected.

The sentencing of the youth, who will be 17 on November 30, had been delayed by Judge Clifton. Kelly until today. Under Florida law, a death penalty case is automatically appealed against and reviewed by the state Supreme Court. This involved a United States withdrawal of some 1,000 tactical nuclear weapons, 0 aircraft and missiles 29,000 troops in return for one or two Soviet tank armies con-sisting of some 1,700 tanks and nearly 70,000 troops from East James Wells, aged 17, was also charged with the murder of Mrs Dixon.

Officials here emphasize that the offer is by no means com-pleted. This will have to await formal approval by Nato formal approval by Nato member-governments in due course. Herr Helmut Schmidt, West German Chancellor, disclosed during a recent visit to Washington that the alliance was working on new concessions to the Russians.

The proposed deal is eported to have been discussed in London last month between American, British and West German officials. On that occasion considerable progress was made, officials say.

The State Department roday refused to give details of any new offer on mutual reduction of forces. But a spokesman con-firmed that consultations among the Nato allies were taking place.

Baker/Previn Festival Hall

Joan Chissell

Since Dame Janes Baker's recital on Monday with André Previn as planist was designed to raise funds for Venice in Peril, it was appropriate that there should be a salute to the city more beautiful than any other b.

It came in three previously unperformed settings by Michael Head of poems by Nancy Bush, the last of them ending with that quoted line. Neither composer nor poet has tried to update his style. Words and music met in simple, romantic evocation of goudolas, pigeons in St Mark's Square, and the city in a storm. The vocal line is as graceful as the piano part is tactful in imagery. No arrists could have lavished more care on the songs than Dame Janet and her partner.

This was not the only premiere. The second half began with five new settings of Philip Larkin poems by Andre Previn himself. Though not exactly a cycle, they are to an extent linked by a theme of emptiness, of vanished joy, caught musically in uncommonly sparse piano parts. Not a word is obscured in the clear-cut vocal line, often striking in details of word near striking in details of word painting. Previn also is no modernist, but these songs emerged as rather more of our time. Not the least effective was "Friday night in the Royal Station Hotel", underpinned by the rhythm of a slow waltz. All prease to Dame Janet for mem-orizing these songs too, and, as the phrase goes, so completely making them her own.

For the rest she travelled from the seventeenth to the early twentieth century with Cavalli, Haydn, Schumann and Faure. Nothing from the earlier period was finer than Hayda's Scena di Berenice: its wide tessitura and sharp contrast of mood drew out the voice in full glory and variety of tone as well as reminding us of this artist's ever-growing dramatic Schumann's Frauen liebe und Leben was at once simple yet intense, every experience lived. through without a trace of sentimentality. The unusually fast, breathless excitement of "Ich kand's nicht fassen" was a kanu's sicht fassen" was a charming touch. As for her closing group of Fauré, the only word for it is ravishing. Mr Previn was an unfailingly sen-sitive parmer area. sitive parmer even if sometimes weight.

Unparalleled prodigality for Dickens

Hard Times

Granada

Michael Church

There is a very contemporary rooy in the fact that Dickens's sperest, most tightly constructed novel should be the occasion for literally unparalleled prodigality on the part of the programme-makers.

One can see why Hard Times appeals to literary scademics; with its stylization and its clear theoretical underpinning it is tailor-made for near graduate theses. One can at showing the shock waves as within a frame that also con-tains references to geometric proportion. So a female nude lies on a surface whose edge is decorated, with a Grecian border and divided into 10 sections, the picture being called Root Five Nude. Or another nude slants across the canyas, her skim bottom and shoulders belanced precariously on a folding wooden chair, to create The Diagonal. They are rigorous pictures, bringing together two disparate disciplines.

One of these the discipline of geometrical harmony, places the paintings in an historical continuum, and their attempt to express spatial ideals gives clarity to the impact of the images. The other discipline, that of recording the object-that of recording the object-seen, is contemporary in its expression, developing out of the Coldstream "look, mark, and look again" (and again and again) method. The clusters of measurement marks, gathering like probing insects see why it appeals to left-wing one social stratum grates on historians and sociologists: it may sport some regrenably bourgeois trains in its handling of militant trade unionism, but its central concern is pure Karl Marx. It is indeed a mervellous book, but it is by no means Dickens's best. His fency-or, if you like, his genius—is simply on too tight a rein.

Arthur Hoperaft's skilful adaptation utterly vindicates the decision to wisit Coketown now, for this is the game our reledramatists are currently

The first 50 minutes of this production represented a highly successful bid to fan Coketown into life. In the exquisite oper ing frames a grim industrial watercolour subtly animated itself until hunched human figures filled the smoky blue gloom. Sleavy's Horseriding was developed into an alternative relations to the colour statement of the colour statement in the colou tive polarity: the circus, tumbling through the infected streets, became a life-force to counter the deadening capitalist machine. The crowd scenes, some straight out of Doré, some strangely reminiscent of Les vised min enfants du paradis, were besutifully orchesarated; director unimport John Irvin and designer Roy actor's di Stonehouse have thoroughly tonation.

The squalor and misery of Stephen Blackpool's life was poignantly set against the com-fortable grossness of his em-ployer's. Patrick Allen's Gradgrind and Timothy West's Bounderby strode through the action like evil deities. The logical, factual schoolroom and the tribulations of Girl Number 20 took on their proper cosmic significance.

So, thumbs up, but with one reservation: the characters sound too modern, and far too southern. At £4,000 per televised minute, care might well have been lavished on those not unimportant aspects of actor's disguise, accent and in-

An operatic find

William Mann

Bruscantini/Meyer

The comic leg in this year's Wexford Opera Festival is itself a tripod, a triple ball devised by Sesto Bruscantini who has all three works. Cimarosa's Il maestro di cappella (a present-day confection derived from his music) is fairly familier, deservedly popular, a cassata cather than an opera, in which the singer rehearses the orchestre in the renearses the dictionaria in me accompaniment to an aria. Bruscautini gives it a dramatic sesting of his own, an elderly opera singer in the audience at a concert, displeased by what he hears, urged by his neighbours to do better which, oours to do bener-which, alas, he no longer can. A touch of pathos is added to the vividly appreciated humour: the singer's orchestral mimicry is particularly vivid, likewise his Ruth Draperish ability to people empty cheirs with mem-bers of an eighteenth-century audience. The familiar text (itself not authentic) is aug-

(itself not authentic) is augmented by some extra phrases in which the orchestra does exactly the opposite of what the maestro asks.

Any cynic inclined to connect the passe star with the present singer had to jettison suspicious in the two companion operos which found Bruscantini's voice and physique in robust, sparkling condition.

Pergolesi's La serva padrona Pergolesi's La serva padrona has bored many an audience with its flimsy, drawn-our plot and repetitious musical invention. This time, for me at least, it seemed agreeable, even mildly amusing, and that in spite of the coy antics assigned to the dumb servant Vespone (Angela Aguade, a lady in travesty). Bruscantini dared us not to enjoy the music for Uberto, the henpecked and weak, very human, master of an impossible menage. Carmen Lavani bent his and our ears with shall relentlessness yet, with shall relentlessness yer, with her prettiness and underlying charm, showed why Ser-pina was successful (her aria "A Serpina penserete" in two tempi and moods was exemplary in that respect) and roused expectations for her contribu-tion to the third of the even-ing's operas.

This was La serva e l'ussero (The Serving-maid and the Husser) by Luigi Ricci (1808-50), one of two composer brothers who kept the flag of Italian comic opera energetically flying in the unpopular wake of Rossini and Donizetti. The enterprise was laudable, the resurrection of La serva e Tussero decidedly worth while.
The piece, five musical numbers for five singers without chorus (only two ariss, and they turn into ensemble), is remem-bered if at all for the Omelette Aria, in which the servant of the title prepares noreadily to cook the dioner. The kitchen-maid then confronts Angelica's official suitor, a hirsute suphoric fop, with a pair of pistols, inducing the mem-orable exchange: "Mad-orable exchange: "Ma woman!" "No, a madman!" Bruscantini's part (that of the father) in this uncommonly effective comedy is small though telling he chiefly added to his laurels for the evening by his assurely timed production of the intrigue. Bonaventure Rottone praced Bonaventure Bottone pranced and grinned hilariously, and seng his aria with hysterical elegance. Miss Lavani's deft, musicianty singing as Angelica, particularly in the bravura finale, and her delicious impersonation of the lovesick, brow-besten daughter, fulfilled all expectations. James Judd's spruce direction of all three operas, as conductor, stylish and well balanced, added much to the merits of an exhibarating evening.

Wexford Festival is bigger than its operatic syflebus.

There are exhibitions, and other sideshows, of all kinds,
besides concerts, recitals, and Mozarr's Requiem next Satur-day. Last Saturday afternoon brought Kerstin Meyer, with a pianist, Jonathan Hinden, as omnipotent as discreet, and a song programme apt to her broad musical range of interests and acute interpretative powers. At first, in Mahler and Wolf the emotional effort was greater than the impact, though there were individual revelations, witness the middle section ("Lang hielt ich staunend") of Wolfs "Auf einer Wander-ung", the enraptured suspense marvellously conveyed.

Her gifts as singing actress were ideally deployed in Grieg's song-cycle Haugussa: the diverse emotions of the young girl, sometimes childish, sometimes altogether womanly. all the time developing, were immediately suggested, the cumulative effect of the cycle most poignant. But then her theatrical experience was used purposefully in each one of Ravel's Histoires naturelles, vocal characterization bound up with appropriate gestures and grimaces, whether absurd, touching, or lovably real.

She sang Granados as one who understands the Spanish temperament completely, pride, sensuality, instinctive shyness beyond such matters as waywardly disciplined rhythm and diction that everybody could understand. Finally she offered her native Swedish, in a song by Sibelius: it was not more expert than her French or Norwegian Landsmal, or other protean polygot feats. Her tone was often forced into a wobble, unnecessary in Wexamong the special pleasures of the performance was the effort- ford's tiny theatre, but what an less stamina with which Michael artist, delightful or touching, Lewis, otherwise a barmone of she is!

The penalty of fame

The Caretaker Greenwich

Irving Wardle

I wish it were possible to banish the memory of Max Wall the stand-up comedian in following his excursions into the serious repertory. It is not so much that you expect him to scupper the proceedings with a wild ad lib or a laughter-quelling glare: but that recollection of his fiveminute sketches inclines you to doubt his ability to develop a character over a full-length show. That has been my im-pression of his Greenwich appearances in Beckett and Shakespeare, and the same goes for his performance as Harold Pinter's tramp.

Whatever other meanings may be extracted from The Caretaker, it is certainly about an alteration in character. The down-and-out Davies is given somewhere to live and probably for the first time in his life sees a chance of laying claim to a bit of territory he can call his own. A lifetime's servility suddenly changes to proprietorial assertiveness which turns venomous when it is threatened. Perhaps all that would be clear to anyone seeing Mr Wall for the first time. But to my eyes it seems that he arrives with a fixed, detailed image of Davies that alters hardly at all from that moment on. He comes on in an old overcoat scrupu-lously belted with a piece of string, affecting a grotesquely genteel accent as befits a guest, and promptly casts etiquette to the winds when he learns about the black neighbours. The speeches rumble along hitting forcefully comic climaxes, all of which pass over the head of Peter Guinness's Aston, a bowed stationary figure with hands dangling from an abbreviated jacket. The pace and vocal contrast of these two is beautifully calculated. That, however, is practically all I could find in Mr Wall's performance, apart from an affecting turn of pathos at the end, and his ludicrously stomach-turning nocturnal ramblings. What seems lacking is the added panic and violence that arise from his involvement with the two competing heads of the house. He is also apt to punctuate the dialogue with grunts and bronchial explosions; and to dwell on passing detail at the expense of rhythmic flow. The same applies to Anthony Higgins's Mick, who lingers lovingly over his visions of the redecorated hovel at the expense of achieving the contrast in tempo with the slow-thinking Aston. It is good to see a revival of this beautiful play, and Paul Joyce's production does offer some pleasures. tion does offer some pleasures (not least Voytek's richly begrimed setting), but the play needs more music than it gets

John Barrymore King's Head

Ned Chaillet

Live theatre feeds on its past, concerned always to show that the plays and players which have gone before live on, that not only the printed word and Hollywood films survive. Even graphical revelations of its wellknown wounded, of actors broken by failure or broken by success, it often seems to seek reflected glory from tarnished

David Kwiat, a young American actor, is treading the stage of the King's Head Theatre at lunchtime, wearing the decaying bedroom slippers and dressinggown of John Barrymore. The stage passes for Barrymore's dressing-room in a Chicago Theatre in 1940, two years before he was to die. The words, connected by a steady draining of all alcoholic beverages in the room, are an assemblage of anecdotes and declamations by Barrymore, touching on his sex life, his aspiration to be an artist, his philosophy of acting and the wages of three bad payments.

Mr Kwiat's script, the result,

marriages, crippling alimony

according to the programme, of two years' research, is coniessional but bombastic, a monologue in the language of bad drama and deflated Shakespeare. There is more irony than pathos in the tales and, to Mr Kwiat's credit, in the telling, but the text hisses with sibilants and Mr Kwiat slurs them as much when he begins drinking as when he has finished drinking and stumbles, uncertainly and late, towards the stage.

Mr Kwiat looks like some pictures of Barrymore, with painted wrinkles and the beloved moustache, but his command of the character is limited somewhat by the emphatic alcoholism. His bleary melancholy gives way only in snappish asides to the unseen stage manager, but, without skimming, the performance covers much of Barrymore's life. Unfortunately, the partsit covers omit the great acting. However legendary his drinking and sexual exploits, it is his acting which makes him memor-able, and all Mr Kwist offers of that is Barrymore's self-denigrating memories.

Liszt Festival New Gallery

must have felt rather like the title character of the poem, called on to sing but left to offer his art to the empry air. To be sure, he did have some listeners, but three dozen people hardly make an audience, more a respectable party for a soirée. Soriées, however, even if they ever could have taken place in a converted cinema, are no more, and recitations with piano accompaniment have died with them. It is not difficult to see why. One cannot attend to narrative and music when the two proceed independently, nor can music, even Liszt's music, attain much when it is placed so firmly in a subordinate position. Moreover. ballads of death and ghostly apparitions are no longer needed to terrify us; we now have The Exorcist and all its progeny. Nevertheless, The Mournful

Monk succeeded in making Michael Gough, reciting The some impression of menace, Blind Singer in a programme of thanks to Rhondda Gillespie's bravado at the keyboard, to Mr Gough's compelling delivery, to William Mann's translation of the Lenau poem, and to the brevity of the piece. Above all the work remains of interest for its startling and eerie whole-tone harmonies, set down two years before Debussy was born.

Among other curios in the recital were Liszt's transcription of Saint-Saëns' Danse macabre, which Miss Gillespie attacked with a will, and four pieces for cello and piano, all of them late. There were several surprises here, not least bewildering rhythm in the plano accompaniment at the opening of the Romance oublies. But the real find was the arrangement List made of his La luguhre gondola which brings out all the music's bitter resentment in the face of death. In that performance, by Lesley Shrigley Jones, its eloquence was almost painful,

London Lassus Ensemble

Queen Elizabeth Hall

Thomas Walker

If you were to be confined to a desert island with the works of but one sixteenth-century composer for company, whose would you choose? Not that I much relish the prospect, my unhesitating choice would be Lassus for the sheer variety of his music, not to mention its wit and refinement.

Clive Wearing, director of the London Lassus Ensemble who performed on Monday night at the Queen Elizabeth Hall. doubtless agrees, and moreover I suspect he could muster enthusiasm for the idea.

Mr Wearing has organized his group in emulation of the musical chapel of the Dukes of Bavaria, whom Lassus served quite match that establishment in size, sex and, one rather hopes, professional standards, the 16 voices and numerous instruments, most of them pleasures. He played by familiar faces on the much higher.

By then Forest were ahead. One of their better moves was halted by a foul from Chapman—who crossed the Irent during the summer—on Woodcock, Robertson beating McManus with his penalty kick in the 17th minute. Far from calming Forest's nerves, and encouraging the type of flowing football which has taken them to the top of the league, the goal had a deadening effect on the same.

There was always a crowd in the middle of the field, although, from time to time. Forest broke out swiftly. But as a man who runs for tun he is more likely to be interested in Olympic giory.

Apart from the Golden Mile, there are 14 other events, which each carry a first prize of $42,725, and in which Britons are more likel yto compete. Those who have been around a long time without getting to the top, may see it as a good way to end a career.

At a press conference in London

At a press conference in London the organizers, the Dubai Sports Corporation, and Falcotry Sports Enterprises, refused to say how many amateur athletes were involved, and mentioned no names; but Leonard Evans, chairman of the championships, said that about 60-65 people were interested.

He expected to disclose 10 or 15 people when the site of nearyear's championships was announced in a few weeks: Edinburgh is one of 10 front runners, the others being, Monreal, Honololu, Tokyo, Berlin, Düsseldorf, Los Angelas, Mexico City, Tehran and Lagos.

Charlie Nash, Claydon's rival for the vacant British title.

Claydon's chance may come in Londonderry

Johany Claydon, of West Ham, is in line for a tilt at the vacant British lightweight championship after his successful defence of the Southern Area title. By outpointing Tony Dunn, of Reading, over 12 feroclous rounds at the Cunard Hotel, London, on Monday night, Claydon carned himself a meeting with Charlie Nash, an Irisbman. The title bout could end up in Nash's home town, Londonderry, Jim Watt refused to box there rearrier this year and was obliged to give up the title. Claydon wants it so badly that he would probably appear in a cage of llong if he had to.

Claydon, badly beaten by Wart to the start of the year, took a ong rest and came back on Monday night hill of fire and ambition. It was a brulsing contest, appropriately in aid of the it John's Ambulance Brigade.

Both Claydon and Dum showed remarkable courage and determination and kept up a great pace throughout. In the end, Dunn was not quite strong enough and the final margin was comfortable, five rounds to two with five shared.

Dunn did well to soak up a lot of punishment in the first three rounds end fight back. There was just a chance that he might turn the tide, especially after Claydon suffered a badly cut left eyebrow from a clash of heads in the fifth round. However, Claydon refused to let the injury bother him and continued to drive forward. Dunn wiked and any lingering doubts were removed when he was floored for a cours of six in the ninth round.

A British title bout would be line remarked for claydon. A British title bout would be a just reward for Claydon, who has now proved his superiority over Dunn with two wins and a draw in three bouts.

Racing Correspondent Timeform's National

Timeform's National Hunt annual of steeplechasers and burdlers is on the bookstalls again. These days £15 may seem a lot of money to pay for a book but this publication is a masterpiece and worth every penny. Chasers and Hurdlers 1976-7 deals, in alphabetical order, with every one of the thousands of jumpers who ran in Britain during last season. The backgrounds and performances of the elite are gone into in considerable detail and the season's incidents and highlights are captured cividly in the book's 330 captured vividly in the book's 330

One of those horses dealt with at length is The Dealer, who is due to make his first appearance of the current season at Ascot of the current season at Ascot today in the Embassy Premier Steeplechase (qualifier). After discussing The Dealer's five victories over hurdles last season and his one disappointing race at Cheltenham the men of Timeform conclude by saying: "He has been lightly raced and probably has further improvement in him; if so he is sure to win again, kept to hurdling. However it is likely in the none too distant future he will be turned to chasing and he is the sort to take future he will be turned to chasing and he is the sort to take high rank over fences."

Against that complimentary backcloth many will expect The Dealer to win this afternoon even more especially as his trainer, Fred Winter, said only last Thursday that he hoped that The Dealer would also qualify for January's final having just seen another of his nice young horses, Midnight Court, put himself in contention by witning the heat at Newbury.

The Dealer won twice at Ascot last season and he is my selection now, but it would be misleading to suggest that he has anything but a stiff task. Flitgrove, King Nepnane, Commandam, Pavement

Artist and Dublin Express all boost some experience of jumping fences at racing pace whereas he does not. And then there is Line Shooter to consider. His best form over hurdles was almost as good as The Dealer's, but as a potential steeplechaser The Dealer is the more appealing prospect. It can be taken for granted that he will have been taught his job thoroughly at home. thoroughly at home.

Those who have won a steeple-chase worth £1,250 must give those who have not 7lb this afternoon and that could easily be a crucial and that could easily be a crucial allowance. I am banking on The Dealer being both versatile enough and good enough to take advantage of the situation. If he does manage to win he could easily become the first of three winners for Winter and his jockey, John Francome. Count Kinure (3.40) and Naughty B (4.10) both give the impression that they could be other winners for what is without doubt one of jumping's most formidable partnerships. Normally I would not expect Count Kinure to beat Early Spring, Isle of Man, Persian Camp or Tip the Wink but fitness is a crucial the Wink but fitness is a crucial factor so often at this stage of the season. In return Brittany Ferries offer freight hanliers and exporters a choice of sailings on year-round routes with excellent traffic-free road connections to all parts of Brittany, South West France and Spain.

Another important ingredient in the success of Brittany Ferries is their ships. The superb new 'Cornouailles' built in 1977, the well-equipped modern 'Armorique' and the Penn-ar-Bed, soon to resume service after an extensive refit including major improvement in accommodation facilities. The Region of Nord-Pas-de-Calais and Cross-Channel Communications

"Nord-Pas-de-Calais a land of men, free towns, of freedom. A welcoming land, the Pays Franc".

The Pays Franc is the name given to the Nord and Pas-de-Calais regions. It is a part of France that is essentially European—open to the sea, and close to England, Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands.

The Pays Franc is Lille-Roubaix-Tourcoing, Lens-Lievin, Douai, Dunkirk, Bethune, Denain, Bruay-en-Artois and Clais-all towns with a population of more than 100,000. It also boasts three of France's chief ports - Boulogne, Calais and Dunkirk.

The Pays Franc means 4 million people, 1.4 million of whom are employed. Of these, one person in every two is employed in industry, four persons in every ten are in the service sector and one person in twelve is employed in agriculture.

In the Pays Franc seven people out of ten live in a town with more than 20,000 inhabitants.

The Pays Franc is a young country—one person in three is less than 20 years of age.

The Calais Chamber of Commerce recently showed its sense of humour by publishing a booklet under the title "The 23 known Ways of crossing the Channel". The thirty kilometres of water that separate France from Great Britain have always been seen as a challenge to the daring and the British have been just as enthusiastic as their Continental neighbours in devising ways of making the crossing-some less crazy than others-though tending rather to highlight their own achievements. The story is told that at the time when swimming the Channel was still regarded as a considerable feat, an exhausted Frenchman reaching the beach at Dover could hope to be met only by a bonneted member of the Salvation Army: proffering him a religious tract.

Since Blanchard and Jeffries first crossed the Channel by balloon in 1785, the methods used to make the journey have been varied. Bleriot, of course, succeeded in doing so by secoplane in 1909 and was followed by others using such diverse methods of transport as a life-jacket, a helicopter (1928), an amphibious vehicle, a bathyscaphe and water skis. In all 23 known methods. There is, bowever, another one....

The twenty-fourth Way

This is the method which has been known and considered for some considerable time, namely the Channel ' that was to pass below the bluey-green waves and link England with France. This was a dream that had been cherished for more than a century and a half but was sbattered one sad day of January 1975 when our British triends decided not to go ahead with the project.

In fact, work had begun on both sides of the Channel and had already cost some 400 million francs. Those responsible in the Department of Nord-Pas-de-Calais were very disappointed at the decision, knowing the harm which the region would suffer as a result of the refusal. Their disappointment was put into words by Pierre Mauroy, President of the Regional Council, as also by Pierre Delmon. Chairman of the Economic and Social Committee, and Robert Delesalle, President of the Regional Chamber of Commerce and Industry, who still continued to hope. . . .

44 The Tunnel is a necessity and facts are more obstinate than men and governments; they will end up winning the day ... "True, Anthony Crosland, British Minister for the Environment, did say when announcing the news to House of Commons that such work as had already seen carried out would be maintained in the best possible state so, that the project could be revived when circumstances were favourable. Was this an empty promise? We anould not necessarily take it as such and it is taken reciously on the French side of the Channel. Why? the work begun on the French side in 1875 and abandoned at 1882. The 92 morre shafts due near Calais at that time to be utilised again in 1972 when the new project t under way. And so we still have faith that one day the Sunnel will become reality-even though it will demand #great deal of patience.

The importance of the seaboard

Why did the Chunnel project arouse so much interest in the Nord-Pas-de-Calais region and why have hopes not et been stilled? Because this region, which geographicilly is part of north-west Europe, needs to trade with Belgium and the Netherlands as well as with Great Britain und Germany. Its industry, which is strong despite the many difficulties which face it, is now forced to cling to the coastine. As early as 1971 official plans for the devel-opment of the Nord-Pas-de-Calais region laid great stress on the advantage to the area of the coastline which extends from the Belgian frontier to the River Somme. It is general knowledge that both technical and economic considerations have caused the steel industry to move nearer the coast and that this movement was what precipitated the great expansion of Dunkirk. The chief factor behind this revolutionary change was the sharp drop in the cost of transport by sea-one has only to think of the size of oil tankers today-which has transformed the economic map of the world and made easily accessible sources of supply that it was previously impossible to tap. The sea has even been referred to as " a new source of raw materials ". This trend, visible everywhere, encourages the establishment of primary industry directly on the

Advantages of Location

To these economic factors others must be added. Thus the Nord-Pas-de-Calais region is located where the sea is sufficiently deep to allow access to vessels of the maximum foreseeable tonnage and is able to draw on the considerable manpower potential of the most densely populated areas of Western Europe—two considerations of importance for the future of the region. Already the main shipping routes of the world converge on the Channel and the North Sea and every year the Pas-de-Calais sees more than a thousand million tonnes of raw materials and finished products being transported from or to the most powerful economic complex in the world. The northern coast of France is situated at one end of the area of high industrial concentration which stretches from the Ruhr to Belvium, the Netherlands and France and then across the Channel to the industrial complexes between London and Manchester. These advantages gain in importance when we consider that the ports of the Rhine delta. Antwerp, Amsterdam and Rotterdam are fast reaching saturation point.

New Infrastructures

In the past, the northern ports of Dunkirk. Calais and Boulogne saw their expansion inhibited by the lack of sufficient inland waterways or a network of roads linking them efficiently with the ports of the Rhine estuary, the Meuse, the Escuat, the industry of the Rhineland and even that of the Paris region. This no longer holds true today, even though there is still much to be done. The important Dunkirk-Valencienne waterway will soon be linked to the rivers and canals of Belgium while the motorways between Lille and Dunkirk, Lille and Paris and Brussels and Paris, as also that under construction between Calais and Basle, which will pass through Arras, Reims and Dijon, already constitute a vital network of communications. Needless to say, since the Channel tunnel project was abandoned, priority has been given to the development of high-speed trains running between Arras, Lille and Brussels and from Brussels to Loudon via Lille and Calais.

Three Ports

All this has tended to enhance the importance of the ports of Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne and despite present difficulties it is the desire of the regional authorities to continue to develop and extend them. Much of the future of the region will be played out on the coasts of the in the number of car ferry services and the greater Channel and the North Sea which are so close to Great

As well placed as Le Havre to receive large vessels and with a reserve equal in size to the port of Romerdam while able to serve a hinterland extending beyond their own immediate region into adjoining regions of France, part of Benelux and the Rhineland, the three ports of Dunkirk, Calais and Boulogne see their role as a markedly European one and are naturally equipped to play a great part in links between France and Great Britain. The fact that the distance separating the two countries is rendered negligible by the growing efficiency and density of communications is thought in the Nord-Pas-de-Calais region to be increasingly symbolic. Is this a mistake? Is it wrong to believe still that the important industrial area around London and the largest industrialised area on the continental mainland in many respects

Cross-Channel Links

This is the present reality and future prospects of cross-Channel links. The latter have always existed in the very nature of things but their spectacular development in less than a century underlines their vital importance. Largely dependent upon the closer bonds which now join Great Britain to Europe, these links are continuously developing but are undergoing an unprecedented change at a technical level which means a greater speed and better quality of service, whether we are thinking of the transport passengers, vehicles or goods. The introduction of the hovercraft which moves on a cushion of air is perhaps the most spectacular illustration of this progress but much has also been accomplished by British Rail, the French Railways and by the various shipping companies. We find on both sides of the Chronel evidence of a desire to keep pace with a traffic which has gone on increasing with the

The three ports of Boulogne, Calais and Dunkirk enjoy important, but different, advantages but the cross-Channel traffic that has in each case built up over the past few years has aroused a good deal of comment.

Boulogne-sur-Mer

The following facts have recently been ascertained: In two years the port of Boulogne now receives as many passengers as it did in the whole of the nineteenth century. The port station is able to accommodate three vessels simultaneously. The train connection with Paris (11 trains in either direction daily) has recently been improved by the taking into service of two turbo-trains.

Situated as it is on the straight line between London and Paris, the port of Boulogne takes full advantage of the possibilities offered by roll on/roll off traffic. In addition to the two berths of the gare maritime serving Dover and Folkestone and the Ro-Ro quay of the Loubet dock, Boulogne has a third berth close to the Commerce dock which is designed to handle larger vessels and covers an area of eleven hectares of land recovered from the sea. The latter alone could produce an increase in goods traffic of the order of 400,000 tonnes per year. There are other important plans for expansion, such as that to extend the ore-handling quay by some 300 metres to enable it to handle vessels of between 60,000 and 80,000 tonnes.

Since commercially Boulogue is mainly oriented towards the roll on/roll off passenger and tourist vehicle traffic, it hopes to benefit considerably from the increase capacity of the giant hovercrafts. In 1958 Princess Margaret was present at the opening of the first continental hoverport, the terminal at Boulogne. This new type of traffic has burgeoned to such an extent that there are now plans for the construction of new facilities able to cope with as many as 10,000 passengers on peak traffic days. This expansion will be carried out in close cooperation with the authorities in Dover, where a new hoverport is being planned.

Calais

Of the three ports of the region, Calais is the nearest to England-a fact which led to its becoming the main rench port handling passenger traffic. In 1975 it broke through the 4,000,000 passenger barrier, thus earning the title of the "English port on the Continent". There is no doubt that Calais most of all was disappointed by the cessation of the Chunnel project but handling as it does half the total number of passengers passing through all French ports, it was already extremely well equipped and its facilities have been constantly expanded with the encouragement of the Chamber of Commerce since this is also the chief vehicle handling port.

The outer harbour is provided with four floating berths which permits a fast turnround of vessels, particularly during the summer period when a ship leaves the port every thirty minutes. Calais has also seen considerable growth in the number of goods lorries handled, with the result that a fourth berth for car ferries and a ten hectare parking area have been brought into service. Hovercraft have been operating from the port since 1966, though this traffic really got under way in 1969 with the opening of the hoverport which covers an area of 12 hectares to the north-east of Calais.

Other important plans for the future include the moving of the East Jetty to make room for a road haulage terminal. The goods transport sector has also undergone marked expansion as a result of the roll on/roll off traffic passing through the port.

Dunkirk

Dunkirk has grown considerably over the past few years because of the siting of the steel industry on the coast and of the increased imports of ore and petroleum products. However, since the "rapid-handling" port of Gravelines situated to the west of Dunkirk came into operation in 1976, the latter has also assumed a more important role in cross-Channel traffic. This has made it possible to substantially cut the time required for the crossing and to shorten loading and unloading times. The new fast handling port means that Dunkirk is only some two and a half hours away from Dover. The port is relying less on an expansion in passenger traffic than on that of accompanied vehicles, heavy lorries and goods. Traffic everall is expected almost to double between 1980 and 1991 while the movement of goods is expected to grow at a rate of 4% to 5% a year. Here again, the roll on roll of system has proved its advantages for short-haul transport. Dunkirk also expects to see an uptrend in container traffic-though more in the longer term-and this would also mean a great increase in the amount of traffic to Le handled by the port of Dover. Hitherto British traffic has accounted for some 10° of total inland water traffic handled by Dunkirk-a figure which is expected to grow

HIS LORDSHIP said that in 1961 Mr Walter Green, in consideration of El, granted to his son, Mr Geoffrey Green, an option to purchase 300-acre Gravel Hill Farm, Thornton-R-Moor, Lincolnstire, at £75 an atre. The option, which was exercisable within 10 years, was not registered under the Land Charges Act, 1925, so that, as a matter of law. Walter touid still sell the farm elsewhere froe from the option, although that would be a breach of contract. On August 17, 1967, Walter in fact conveyed the farm to his wife, Evelyne, for £500. Having learnt of that, Geoffrey, after legal advice, caused an estate contract to be registered on September 5, and on October 6 gave formal noice exercising his option. Neither of his parent compiled with the notice.

On Morth 28, 1968, Evelyne died mespectedly. Her will was proved by her husband and her sons, Geoffrey and Derek, as her executors. IRAN AIR

The world's fastest growing airline, believe it or not, is Iran Air. It really is.

For instance, every year for the past five years we've bought more new planes.

And every year for the last five years we've flown more passengers to more destinations.

So that today you can fly Iran Air to any one of twenty seven major cities throughout the world.

Including, by the way, London, Moscow, Peking. Tokyo and New York.

What's more, we're the only airline flying London-New York that can offer you a choice of Jumbos. The latest 747-200B.

Or the new 747SP.

The same plane we fly from New York to Tehran, one of the longest non-stop scheduled flights ever.

Over 6,200 miles. A distance the 'Special Performer' Jumbo covers with ease.

Because it flies a mile above normal air routes. A mile above the bad weather.

Making it one of the most comfortable planes in the air.

And that's not pie in the sky. It's a fact. Like everything else on this page.

The world's fastest growing airline.

propitious time.

Finally, when the President gives a 1977 deadline for the resumption of Geneva, be cannot fail to have in mind the mid-term elections which take place in 1978. The pro-Israel vote will be courted and Jewish contributions to political funds solicited; 1978 would not be a good year for the President to appear to be applying pressure to Israel.

Writing on July 5, I suggested that the attitude of American Jewry to Mr Begin's new government would be determined by whether Mr Carter appeared to be leaning heavily on Israel or whether Mr Begin was perceived to be that prognosis, two have swung Jewish more solidly behind Mr Begin's official visit in July which was a personal triumps.

He impressed the Jews by his style and oratory as well as by his close identification with the Jewish tradition. He was pro-cise in saying what Israel wanted and presented his case in moderate terms.

But the picture changed rapidly over the issue of the new settlements on the West Bank. The President was offended and his personal rap-port with Mr Begin became strained. Some Jewish leaders and organizations were desply disturbed and there was talk of public protest. The split in American Jewry, of which the President could take valuable advantage, seemed to be begin-

Then Jewish opinion rallied in favour of Israel as American support seemed to be progressively deteriorating. First the PLO was asked to amend its charter before it could be accepted as a negotiating party at Genera. Those fears were seen to be realized with the publication on October 1 of the joint United American Jewry, so sensitive to and so emotionally involved in the cause of Israel, vibrated in a nationwide, part spontaneous, part organized reaction. The White House alone received no fewer than 8,000 telegrams that morning. Campaigners for Democratic Party funds re-ported a serious withdrawal of financial 'support. There were three reasons for this immediate and massive demonstration of pro-Israel sentiment. First was the feeling that it could not but bode ill for Israel to bring back Russia which arms and gives full political support to the Arabs, In this, the pro-Israel-liberals were supported by anti-Soviet right-wingers. Even more ominous was the United States acceptance of the phrase "rights of the Palestinians" instead of the hitherto preferred "interests". By "rights" the Russians are known to mean a Palestinian state while the meaning given by the United States remains worryingly obscure. Finally, apprehension was aroused by the conspicuous omission of any reference to resolution 242.

A leader of the Israel lobby told me that "even we were stunned by the force of the reaction". And it was not limited to Jews. Senstor Hubert Humphrey, whose influence in the Democratic Party in the Pa

It came a week later in the form of the Carter-Davan working paper in which the United States reaffirms resolution 242 and accepts Israel's position that the United States-Soviet statement is not binding on them. The working paper had the secondary effect of persuading Jewish leaders that the Beeth government was not as suaong jewish leaders that the Berh-sovernment was not as uncompromising as they had feared. Not since its momentous a cornerstone of government good doctors. That fact makes judgment in 1954 outlawing policy. segregation in schools has the United States Supreme Court been called on to make a decision of greater importance to the social and educational structure of the country than that in the Bakke case. The Court, sensitive to the enormous practical and political effect its decision will have, may try to decide the issue on narrow grounds, creating as restricted a precedent as possible. If it does that, it is virtually certain that other cases will come before the Court, forcing it eventually to rule on the principle, that of the legality of reverse discrimination.

The facts of the Bakke case are simple, and the issue, stark. Mr Bakke, a white man, was оле of more than 2,000 people to apply to the University of California's medical school at Davis. There were 100 vacancies. He was not successful, but 16 black, Hispanic and Asian-American applicants gained acceptance. All of them had lower marks than Bakke, but were able to get places because the medical school had a policy—in the form of a quota-designed to help students from disadvantaged minority groups. Bakke claims that by its refusal of his application, the University had denied him his constitutional right to equal treatment. The University admits discrimination, but justifies it on the ground of policy, not only its own but that of successive United States govern.

ments. The Issue raises a genuine dilemma, not least among Americans of enlightened and liberal Two desirable social objectives On the one hand, there is the principle of non-discrimination and equality between men, irresnective of race. On that basis Pakke has a justified grievence that, because of the colour of his skin, and not because of any the lack of merit, he has been given nferior treatment to someone of lessar attainment but, in this context. privileged racial group. On the other hand, and especially in the longer-term, the parrowing of the economic, educational cultural social gap between whites and blacks is an objective which has for a long time been the exams, or could not make

Without some reverse discrimination that cannot be achieved. If Davis medical school were to admit students purely on their educational record, few, if any, blacks would get in, and there would be few black doctors graduating. Multiplying that effect throughout the field of higher education, and in employment (where there is also an active policy of reverse discrimination, usually by quota) would, it is argued, result in the gap between black and white becoming greater, not narrower, with untold political consequences for the future. There is also an element of guilt involved in existing policies: an attempt to make up for wrongs done to minority racial groups in the past by favouring them-some-times to excess—in the present. It is not surprising that there has been a certain backlash to policies of reverse discrimi-nation. They involve a degree of social engineering which many white Americans (and people of other countries, including Britain) find unacceptable. They are not convinced that the methods used are the right ones for the objective desired, and are mistrustful of a policy by which individual injustices have to be accepted today for a heralded better society tomorrow, which they are unlikely to see and which, anyway, may not work at all. The record of governments which indulge in social engineering to any substantial extent does not inspire confidence. It is difficult to know where to draw the line in applying a policy of reverse discrimination, but one distinction can be made. Giving jobs, or university places, to members of disadvantaged groups who are totally unsuited to them by experience or qualifications should not form part of any such policy. Where there is a black candidate who would not be considered for the job or place if he were white, he should not get it. Where, however, the choice is between candidates of roughly equal ability, it might be considered permissible to favour the black candidate. In the Bakke case itself, there is no suggestion that the 16 blacks accepted into the school did not reach the minimum requirements, or that they would not be able to cope with the Supreme Court's task all the more difficult.

It should not be thought that the issue of reverse discrimination is relevant only to the experience of the United States. It has been considered at some length by the British government, whose conclusion was given legislative effect by section 35 of the Race Relations Act 1976, which exempts from the various forms of unlawful discrimination set out "any act done in affording persons of a particular racial group access to facilities or services to meet the special needs of persons of that group in regard to their education, training or welfare, or any ancillary benefits . Other provisions of the Act provide similar exemption from liability for job-training schemes which benefit disadvantaged racial groups.

The government's attitude to reverse discrimination was set out in the White Paper which presaged the 1976 Act. After accepting the principle that discrimination in favour of or against a racial minority would at first blush, be equally unlawful the White Paper goes on: However, if the principle of non-discrimination is interpreted too literally and inflexibly it may actually impede the elimination of invidious discrimination and the encouragement of equal opportunity." The government has therefore accepted—and enshrined in law—the positive contribution that reverse discrimination can make.

Britain bas no constitution or Bill of Rights which a rejected white applicant for an educational course or job can invoke in aid. That does not mean that Britain is immune from the possibility of a Bakke-type contro-More and more Britishborn blacks and Asians are of the generation just entering employment or tertiary education. Many of them suffer from feelings of frustration caused by imagined or real discrimination against them, and are pressing for compensation in the form of reverse discrimination. If the government goes too far towards meeting those demands, Britain may well have its own dis-gruntled Bakke. Yet if the government is too reluctant to accept reverse discrimination, the effect will be to increase the general effect of discrimination and disadvantage in society.

Private remarks made public

From Mr Alan Clark, MP for Plymouth, Sutton (Conservative)

Sir, k is interesting (leading article, October 22) that you should defend Sir Richard Dobson's dismissal on the grounds that his remarks "left the impression" that he helived many people "... to be inferior". The principle that the human field is one where it should not be permitted to assert, or act upon, qualitative judgments is certainly one which (because it is so unnatural) has had to be reinforced by statute penalizing "discrimination".

But there is at least one element of comfort to be drawn from the uffair—namely, it has confirmed that abstract concepts, ideas, are stronger (and, therefore, in repressive societies, more to be feared) than actions.

It is a well accepted fact of life, recently given the force of law, that there are practically no limits to the personal and practical incomperence of the job holder. Prolonged mis-management, defective forecasting. gross idleness, sexual deviance and embezziement seem to disqualify no one from having their employment "protected". But even the most homely and familiar of expressions—"woes", "too-big-forpressions—"wogs", "too-big-for-their-boots"—any suspection that the Emperor, for from having no clothes on, might just possibly have some of his buttons undone is, it seems, intolerably offensive to our corporate masters. to record a speech on a private occasion, It certainly is a good thing that people should say what they think. But is it not a sad-but typical-aspect of our adversarial society that leaders (be they of management, or trade unions, or of political parties) should hold, or at any rate be reasonably interpreted as bolding, generalized and preas bolding, generalized and pre-judiced views about their opposite numbers? And is it not sadder that any such leaders should either hold or express opinions tinged with casual racidism? And are not these problems more important than a breach of good manners—I sincerely hope that, if the recording had first been made available to The Times, you would have reproduced it.

Recognition of ordained women

From the Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambriage

Sir, In your correspondence and leading article on the recent celebration of Holy Communion in this country by an American woman priest there seems to be a tendency to confuse two questions which ought so far as possible to he kept distinct. These are: (a) that of the ordination of women priests in the Church of England, and (b) that of the recognition by the Church of England of priests of other churches of the Anglican Communion who are women.

With regard to the former the Anglican Group for the Ordination of Women to the Historic Ministry of the Church, of which I am chair man, has always insisted that the man, has always insisted that the change of policy which we desire must be brought about by strictly constitutional means after the fullest consideration by the Church as a whole, and this is surely right. Illegal or irregular action, such as the ordinations of women by American bishops before their church had decided to edunit women to the priesthood, would be discre-dimble and counter-productive.

In respect of the laster issue, however, the simulation is different. Without consulting the General Syrod or the dioreses, our bishoos announced that they would refuse to license any Anglican oriest from rbroad to officiete in 1314 country if she is a woman. This policy seems to be full of inconsistencies, as well as deeply offensive to individual priests and to the churches to which they belong. The women in onestion have undeniable been ordained canonically. he rites which the Church of Freiand acknowledges as valid, in, and by the authority of, churches with which the Church of Ernland is in full communion.

The only proper ground for a general refusal to liceuse any Anglican women priests as such would appear to be a belief on the bishops' part that they are not in fact priests. But in that case the Church of England could not possibly main-tain, as it claims to do, full com-munion with the churches that have ordained, or purported to ordain, them. Full communion which does not entail interchangeability ministries is not "full".

There are those, indeed, who hold that these ordinations were invalidated by the mere fact that the recipionts were women: but this position is not open to the bishops collectively, since the General Symod, by majorities in each of the Houses of Bishops, Clergy, and Laity, has already recorded its view that there is no fundamental objection in principle to the ordination of women. It might perhaps be argued that the effect of licensing is to give an overseas priest the same status for the time being as a priest of the Church of England, and that for a woman this is impossible since in the Church of England no woman can become a priest. But since these women are in fact priests, of churches with which we claim to have interchangeability of ministries, that argument is scarcely convincing, In these circumstances it may well be that the most effective way to persuade the bishops to revise their policy is for clergy and congregations to invite visiting Anglican women priests to celebrate Holy Communion whenever suitable occasions arise. "Disobedience" in this matter is entirely consistent with strict legality and propriety in respect of the ordination of women within the Church of England. A very useful first step might be for those bishops who were aggrieved by the recent incident to test the actual state of the exising law m the courts.

Yours faithfully.

of us who see no theological reason why the universal Church should not decide to ordain women. Indeed our understanding of Christian proctice and thinking leads us to expect development and channe. But we equally believe that this issue is too big for such a small section of Christians as the Anglican Communion to decide by itself.

There are certainly things which Anglicans are capable of deciding on We can do what we believe to on. We can do what we believe to be right with our own domestic property. Thus we ought to he shie to decided about the Book of Common Priver and the role of the Thirty-nine Articles. But there are certain things which we hold in common with other Civistians, such as the Creeds and the Canon of scripture. Experience shows that if you tammer unlikeerably with these ends of unity you cause Christian disunity. Because Anglicans have claimed that the ministry lies in this cree-gory of "censuon property", any substantial change in its ordering must depend on the decision of the common hody. This is just as much a matter of principle and conscient a namer of principle and conscience as any which the advacates of women priests may invoke. The full dimensions of the problem facing the Anglican Communion will not be grasped unless the issue is seen for what it is, not principle against presentism, but principle against principle.

JET GOES TO CULHAM-TWO YEARS LATE

Even by the standards of the lobbying for their fusion research ject will make to the use of EEC, two years is a long time for the main rival. Secondly, the yet certain. But when the issue JET project will be the first at stake is, ultimately, the ... European Torus (JET) project has been discussed at four meetlings of ministers responsible for research in the Nine, three meetings of foreign ministers, and once at the summit in the European Council. At times it seemed the project would gener-ate more ill will than cheap Belgium, Italy, France, West Germany and Britain all hymned the superior advantages of their proffered site. Most of the rival claimants, most notably Britain, used blocking tactics in the Counil of Ministers to defend their laims, with the EEC's four-year esearch programme as the most common victim.

Yesterday at last the necessary act of political fusion took place it a ministerial meeting in Luxmbourg, with a decision in ayour of the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's aboratory at Culham, near exford. This is welcome on two blown EEC institution. These are the pluses. On the minus side, the design team at Culham under the direction of a French physicist has been seriously affected by the two years of wrangling and indeci-sion at the political level. The original team of some fifty five scientists has dwindled to thirty four, as those auxious to secure their own future or the education of their children returned to base, or were lured to the United States. It is hoped that some of them may now be persuaded to return.

Equally distressingly, those who remained at Culham have had to see the rival American project at Princeton forging ahead with a full team of some 350, much the same number as the eventual complement required by the JET project at Culham. Although the Americans have been experiencing some problems on the design side, they have enjoyed the benefit of a firm decision to go ahead more than two years ago. Stopping hijacking From Mr S. Hills

Sir, As a long standing and very frequent air naveller over the past 20 years I have also been addressing my thoughts to possible ways of threating the hijacking of aircraft. Sealing the cockpit from the passenger carrying area and the Sealing the cockpit from the passenger carrying area and the use of "knock-our" gases I'm afraid are not effective solutions, as there must always be some communication between the cockpit and the main body of the aircraft, thus enabling the hijacker to bargain, and in any case, the hijackers can and, in any case, the hijackers can always prepare himself with a gas mask (Airport 1977—a novel by Michael Schaff and David Spector). There are, however, two possible enintions: (1) The method adopted on internal flights in Korea and Teiwan, whereby each crew mem-ber and traveller carries no hand baggage at all and is required to empty his pockets and her hand-bag into a small backet for detailed examination before boarding.

(2) That each and every traveller is required to sign a declaration before boarding the siteraft that, in the event of a brinching, they are prepared to accept all the risks involved including the loss of their The first solution is perhaps inconvenient but very few of us in fact need the items we always carry in our briefcases, etc., and it is not much of a scarifice to do without them even on a 20-hour

First class at cut rates

From Mr P. A. Reen Sir, Margaret Dennes Cohen's letter of October 22 about an elderly man buying, at half price, a first-class ticket to Paddington the senior citizen's scheme is a sub-sidized facility.

This is not so. It is a commercial scheme to stimulate travel by senior citizens and so to increase revenue. It has succeeded magnifi-cently in this respect. One of its artractions to old people is that it is available, for example, on sleeping car services and in first class. Since, therefore, travelling first class benefits the taxpaver rather that the reverse, I hope Mrs Dennes Cohen would not wish to deny senior citizens the right to purchase this additional comfort.

Happy-pills that so often lead to suicide

Dr Colin Brewer points: out the dangers of treating unhappiness as a medical problem;

One of the most lethal ironies of modern medical practice is that increasing numbers of British men and women are committing suicide with medically prescribed drugs which are supposed to make them feel happy. This is a fairly question, knon as tricyclic antidepressants, were only introduced in 1959. Since then, psychiatrists and GPs have prescribed them liberally, to the tune of 3,500,000 prescriptions in 1965 and 8,000,000 in 1974, representing 2.7 per cent of all National Health Service prescribing.

Tricyclics are the most poisonous of all the drugs commonly used in psychiatric practice, and the first patient to succeed in killing herself with them did so within a year of their introduction. In 1965, at least 19 succesful suicides were attributable to tricyclics, and the number has increased sreadily to 167 in 1974. This represents 9 per cent of atl suicidal poisonings and excludes a number of deaths classified by coroners as "accidental " or " undetermined whether accidental or suicide", a proportion of which are undoubtedly suicidal.

unhappy people sometimes try to kill hemselves, but that very fact should have made doctors cautious about prescribing drugs which could prove fatal even after are still one of the most ponular drugs for successful suicide, but a patient is unlikely to die if he reaches hospital alive after a barbiturate overdose. In contrast, tricyclics can kill even if the patient is under constant supervision in an intensive

Many doctors prescribe these drugs generously in the belief that they nip depression in the bud and stop people getting to a suicidal stage or needing to be admitted to hospital. Unfortunately, there is little evidence bat tricyclics have led to any fall in the number of admissions for depression or in the number of suicides. The suicide rate has certainly fallen since 1964, but that is accounted for almost entirely by a reduction in coal-gas poisoning, presumably thanks to natural gas. The incidence of suicide by tablets and by other methods has stayed fairly constant since then, while the number of admissions for deliberate overdose (not all of them suicidal) has increased about threefold.

I must stress that I regard tricyclics as useful drugs and prescribe them myself occasionally, but these figures suggest that many of those who attempt or commit suicide are not suffering from conditions which respond to medication.

The basic cause of this epidemic of self-poisoning with happy-pills is the medicalization of misery. What used to be called "unhappiness", with the medicalization of misery. What used to be called "unhappiness", with the implication that it was part of the human condition, to be dealt with—if at all—by personal or social change, is now called "depression", with the implication that it is a disease like typhoid or caucer which it is the responsibility of doctors to contain the containing the content of the con liminate. There are certainly some patients who are profoundly miserable without apparent cause and who can be thought of as "ill", but they are comparatively rare.

This is not the first time that a useful treatment has proved to be a two-edged sword, and we have some precedents to guide us. A total ban is neither nocessary nor likely, but doctors must be made more aware of the toxicity of tricyclics and be more discriminating in their prescribing d see too many perients who have had druss prescribed without any attempt to find out why they are unhappy, or in the usually vain hope that drugs will somehow enable the patient to feel jolly in the face of a rotten marriage, a frustrating job, or an unfortunate personality. .

One solution is to place some small but irritating bureaucratic obstacle in the way of prescribing, such as filling out a form in duplicate. This system was used with success in Australia for certain very expensive drugs. In an age when many repeat prescriptions are written by doctors' receptionists, even a requirement that the GP himself should write it (as is mandatory for some addictive drugs) could lead to more selectivity. Limiting the number of tablets to be dispensed at one time and having them foil-wrapped might reduce the risks of an impulsive overdose, as would entrusting the tablets to someone other than the patient lu the longer term, prescribing habit will probably shift to safer anti-depressants, of which several examples depressants, of which several examples siready exist. Looking even farther into the future—perhaps unrealistically far—doctors and parients might question the whole philosophy of "pills for personal problems" which is as dangerous and as ineffective now as when people only had alcohol and opium to help them to ignore what they preferred not to see. what they preferred not to see.

Jim Callaghan, then Home Secretary, described the urban and programme as arresting the downward spiral which afflicts so many of the depressed and most overrowded parts of our towns nd cities. He said: "There is a deadly quagmire of need and apathy." The idea was to pinch from Peter to pay Paul by switching to special great category money already in the rate support grant for general allocation. In this way £60m was earmarked from rural to urban areas and with no extra cost to government. Yet to obtain a 75 per cent award local authorities, had to find the balance of 25 per cent either from existing budgets or by borrowing. For the poorer authorities this often proved prohibitive. Further, by providing cosmetic figure for community service programmes and building projects, an illusion was created that urban aid would cure city

A further £5m was spent by

The urban bandwagon rolled on. A newly established Community Programmes Department in 1972 launched neighbourhood schemes for £150,000 a piece—a * Parallel and crossfertilising experiment with the Community Development Pro-Community Development Pro-ject. he picked up at another spot on the globe; the presence or absence of pulses would, rather like Morse code be a means of transmitting messages. Detection of the neutrinos is a complex process and would probably be done under water. A small fraction of the neutrinos will collide with neutrons in the water and yield a muon. The latter travels about 50 metres before being absorbed and emits light along its path. This up-ward shining light could then be picked up by photo-detectors, which would not see any scattered synlight if the detectors were deep enough under water. There are many possible configurations of detectors; the authors envisage hundreds of them spaced within a cube of water of sides 200 metres or more. ... If certain planned improvements were made to the Fermilab accelerator it is expected that each pulse of neutrinos would lead to about 22 detectable "events"

With the best possible conditions it seems that about one "bit" of information might be trans every second.

Compared with the power of radio, satellites and cables this flow of information is utterly trivial, but the authors are no looking to replace present means of communication. They are undoubtedly trying to improve com-munications with submarines. Radio waves penetrate only to very shallow depths in oceans, and communication by sound may Even a slow stream of information to a deep submarine might be helpful (but the submarine cannot communicate back to the accelerator) and interference with such a channel is almost impos-sible. Thus, although the idea sible. Thus, almongh the idea may seem bizarre and to require an immense amount of hardware, it is just possible that military applications could justify it. "It cannot continue on this basis for very long," he added.

This City paid £84m a year, more than bail the corporation's locuse from rotes, to the Inner London Education Authority, he said, yet the ILEA did not run any schools in the City. He believed that the running costs of the Guidhall School should be taken from the sum puid to the ILEA.

regarded us an outstanding feature of modern society. These books have been influential, partly because they have been controversial. Halmos continued to work on this theme while occupying the Chair of Sociology at Cardiff, from 1965 to 1974. He then moved to the Open University and was immediately engaged in work in which these ideas of his were despiv involved. He was well aware that by then both the professions and the personal social services were object of criticism from various angles, in particular from those who held that only political remedice could be effective. It is not surprising that his last book, now in the press, should hear the title The Personal and the Political.

Paul Halmos was twice manried. The ties: marriage, from which there was one son, was dissolved. In 1972 he married Ena Edwards, who was working in the Open University; the He was instrumental in starting years of happiness this marriage a sories of monographs, under brought him were all too brief.

MR ARTHUR TOURTELLOT

Mr Arthur B. Tourtellot, the American historian and broadcasting executive, died in New York on October 18 at the uge of 61. He had been under intensire care since the beginning of September after contracting amnebic dysentery while on holiday in Crete.

Lennard Miall writes: Arthur Tourtellot was a man with a well-stocked mind and a distinguished career in three different fields. Primarily he was a historian, trained at Haryard and Oxford His book Benjamin Franklin, the Shaping of Genius, published last year and widely acclaimed, had followed several others on the origins of the War of the American Revolution, all written with meticulous scholarship and a

But Tourtellot was highly creative as a chronicler of modern wars in modern media. He was the associate producer of the famous warring March of Time films. This led him on to becoming producer of the television version of General Eisenhower's book Crusade in Europe, which won him one of the highly coveted Peabody awards in 1949. He was also the editor of Life Magazine's Picture History of

World War II.

Tonrreliot's television work brought him into close contact with William S. Paley, the founder and long-time Chairman of the Board of the Columbia Broadcasting System. He became one of Paley's right president of the general execu-tive of CBS. Latterly he was particularly concerned with dispensing lurge funds set up by Paley in two foundations for imaginative patronage of the arts. Both the William S. Paley Foundation, of which Arthur Tourtellot was a vice-president, and the CES Foundation, over whose board he presided, have been ploughing back substantial money from the huge American broadcasting income into various projects to continue the

and was an enthusiastic sup-porter, for instance, of the music scholarships of the Royal Society of Arts, and of the work of the British Academy of Film and Television Arts in establishing its International Centre in Piccadilly to foster the creative skills for the screen. US brokers say bear market 'here to stay'

From Our United States Washington, Oct 25

Share prices on United States stock exchanges declined so far early today that brokers dec-lared that the "bear" market had firmly established itself. Both the Dow Jones average: of transportation and industrial hares hit their lowest levels in over two years—a clear signal that the stock markets have entered a new and bearish Sentiment was again dominated by concern over possibly higher interest rates, the lacklustre outlook for the economy and the apparent confusion in Congress and the White House over energy and tax reform Good news from Detroit, indicating a sharp rise in new car sales in mid-October, failed to have any effect.

The Dow Jones' industrial average fell more than three points to below the 800 level, and now stands more than 20 per cent below its highest 1977 level. At the same time the Dow Jones transportation average dropped below the 200 point thus breaching the previous low point of 203.85 onOctob er 12, 1975—and more than 14 per cent below the high point reached early this year.

These deckines have themselves provided early this and

Bank Governor joins calls for tax reliefs to help small companies

Gordon Richardson, Governor of the Back of England, yesterday added his voice to those in favour of tax concessions for small companies. At a conference on the future of private companies, organized by the Industrial and Commer-cial Finance Corporation, Mr Richardson said a better tax climate would be a more potent token of a shift in sentiment in favour of small businesses than favour of small businesses than would specific measures taken to subsidize the cost of finance or to plug the information gap.

Emphasizing that the malu requirement was "the creation of an environment more benign to business", he said that the small business sector could not the involve it was restible in thrive unless it was possible in the first place to accumulate capital, and then to transmit it to the family under conditions which did not compel either the income currently impairs the efficiency of small firms, par-ticularly through the combined effect of company taxation and personal taxation, he said.

Mr Richardson said: "Government has recognized that the level of direct personal taxation adversely affects incentives and thus blunts initiative, entrepre-neurial and etherwise. It is therefore the aggregate of the tax burden on small businesses that needs to be looked at, as well as its complexity."

He urged a resolution to problems created by the defer-red tax element in company balance sheets and also appealed for simplification, valueadded tax on small companies

But he argued that the decline in the number of individuals with capital for investment could not be wholly reversible, and some shift in the pattern of personal savings towards the institutions must be accounted.

There were bound to be dif-ferences in approach to invest-ment between institutional and individual investors, he went on. "If the small business sector is not to suffer from this trend towards the institution-alization of personal savings we must look to the institutions to devise new vehicles for making their due contribution to the financing of small business. "This in turn implies some change of attitude by the proprietors of small businesses: they may have to be willing to share more of their equity than their instincts urse them to do."

Mr John Methyen, director-general of the Confederation of British Industry, also called for tax cuts for small businesses, reiterating the demands laid out in a recent CBI report on small firms, Eighties. Enterprise

Yesterday's admission by Sime Darby represents the first official attempt to quantify the potential size of losses involved after weeks of speculation about a major upset in the aviation market.

The situation first came to light when the brokers Marthews Wrightson made certain provisions in its interim igures. Later the firm said it had taken a "commercial decision" with regard to certain bad debts rather than attempt to reclaim them by costly legal action.

Several other brokers believed to be exposed to the problem, though their potential losses are thought to be on a gressively eroded. Berger claim-much smaller scale than the ing that its margins are at least £300,000 or so involved in the case of Wrightson.

Speculation in recent weeks has been increased by two statements issued by the British Insurance Brokers Association which endeavoured to explain that such practices and losses were a normal feature of operations.

Practical experience in this country does not unambiguously support worker share schemes ICI has a successful scheme, but its chairman himself said that this type of scheme is not suitable for most companies. Courtaulds had a similar scheme, but in 1966 this was abandoned as it was judged to be useless. In 1970 the John Lewis Partnership inproduced cash bonuses instead

There are many positive arguments against legislation in this area (not against profit sharing per se). Shareholders have in recent years had a raw deal compared with employees, and there is no case for Government pressure on them to reduce further their rewards in favour of employees. Indeed in macro-economic terms the proposal

A further argument is that effort and thrift would be turther discouraged, in favour of the welfare state mentality. If employees were made shareholders by being given shares, in addition to their present level of income which must be assumed to be a full and fair reward for their labour, they are surely reinforced in the all too prevalent belief that saving is not worth while.

It is easy for any political party to appeal to the normal desire of ordinary men for greater affluence, and a cosy slogan like "profit sharing implies that everyone has a implies that everyone has a right to more income than at present. Too little, too late from the accountants

As a precursor of the Cross report on the now has wide and expanding interests outdisciplinary proceedings of the accountancy profession, yesterday's comments by the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales come as a damp squib. The institute has had its general statement on DoT reports ready for some six months, but waited until it had some specific comments before publishing.

These comments on accountants involved in criticisms of Bernard Russell Ltd and John Willment (Automobiles), are so anodyne as to make their publication hardly worth while; the only concrete proposal to come out of the whole exercise is that nonexecutive directors and company secretaries should resign, making public the reasons for their resignation, when irregular practices continue in a company despite their efforts to change its course.

A laudable sentiment no doubt. But nothing that was said yesterday will lead the public to believe that justice is being seen to be done over misconduct or unprofessional behaviour by accountants. That is the province of the institute's disciplinary committee, which to date has been reticent to publish its findings in a way that the public can clearly see where members have

And recommendations over the future conduct of the disciplinary committee must wait for publication of the Cross report, which is expected in the second week of November. Every indication is that it will suggest that the accountancy bodies should bring out censure statements in the kind of detail which has been used by the Take-over Panel and recently by The Stock Exchange in the SUITS affair.

Annual Report

ATV's rights issue comes six weeks after in increase in authorized capital was approved at the annual meeting. Then Lord Grade told shareholders there were no immediate plans to issue new capital so ATV could be seen to be acting in almost unseemly haste in asking shareholders to stump up £9.1m.

The timing, however, is understandable since ATV faces significant balance sheet deterioration as a result of the decision to buy out its American partners in its associated film financing company, AGF.
This brings AGF's debts into ATV's balance sheet at the year end so group borrowings could increase from £15m to as much as £26m compared against shareholders' funds of some £40m.

It also allows ATV the opportunity to Pre-empt what at first glance will be gloomy interim figures with a confident full year orecast of profits in excess of £13m against last year's £11.1m. Financial markets are waiting with bated breath to hear what Mr Healey has to say about sterling and the money supply today. In the week of the autumn package, how-ever, money markets appear to have been taking the view that the downward trend in short-term interest rates may well have come to an end.

Even ahead of last week's safety first action by the Bank of England in the discount market, there was little indication that the market felt much incentive to drive Treasury Bill rates any lower. And that being the case, the yield curve out to one year has been resuming a more normal shape with rates beyond three months tending to firm. Indeed, over the past 10 days or so, most 12 month rates have hardened by as much as half a point—local authorities lagging slightly behind with the rates on this week's batch of yearling bonds up just under a per cent to 64 per cent.

So far, it has largely been a case of lenders taking a slightly more wary line rather than borrowers moving fast to stock up while money is cheap. If and when the banks get the first sniff that lending may be on the move again in a big way, however, rates could move fairly sharply. First, however, ever, Mr Healey and the foreign exchange markets must have their day.

Small business

Don't expect miracles

There cannot now be much doubt that the political bandwagon in favour of improving the lot of small businesses is rolling with such momentum as to make tax concessions a near certainty. The only question is whether the Chancellor will make his move today or whether he will content himself with a minor gesture as a prelude to some-thing more full-blooded after Mr Harold Lever's report next month. Either way it seems that Sir Harold Wilson's Committee, which has acted as a catalyst in turning the "plight" of small companies into a political issue, will be preempted in anything it may ultimately have to say.

Among those most closely involved in the financing of small companies, however, there is some puzzlement over why the issue has assumed the proportions it has. Few, if any, submissions to Wilson have contended there is a serious shortage of finance for small companies, and the Governor of the Bank of England made some timely co day by way of putting the matter into perspective. He noted that the evidence to Wilson did not so much seek particular government intervention to solve the problems of small businesses as the creation of a generally more favourable environment. The point is as apposite for big companies as

This is not to say that no specific measures are needed to help small companies. It is clear that the tax burden on them is unduly severe and does discourage growth. But helpful though changes in, say, capital transfer tal and marginal income tax rates may be thele are not the whole answer. For that one must look to a fundamental shift in the business chimate so that it holds out the prospect of a continuing stable real rate of return on investment.

Any increase in capital investment must therefore be slow. However much the Chancellor gives back to small entrepreneurs it will take years to reverse the steady erosion in confidence of the past two decades. Even then, as the governor remarked, it is doubtful whether the individual could ever again recover the share of national resources he

The official definition of longterm memployment is being year or more. There is a case for drawing a line at six months because it is afte six months of unemployment that earnings re-lated supplement ceases.

This pushes up quits drama-tically the number of men between 25 and 40 who are counted as part of the long-term unemployed. Nearly half of the 175,000 who had been without work for between six months and a year in July were in this age group.

Long-term unemployment not just a maie phenomenon. In July of this year 17 per cent of those registered out of work for more than a year were women, compared to less than 10 per cent in 1974. Women now account for over a quarter of those who have been on the dole queue for between six months and a year.

It has been estimated that roughly a half of those on the dole are also claiming benefit to bring their incomes up to the official poverty line, while a further 50,000 are eligible for but not claiming benefit. This but not claiming benefit. This will be equal to £33.45 a week for a married couple with two children between five and eleven and £14.50 for a single person after the benefit uprating next month

Flat rate unemployment benefit, where rent is not automatically covered, will be £14.70 for a single person and, with child benefits included, £30.80 a week for a married couple with two children.

Between the end of 1975 and the beginning of this year there has been a near doubling to 114,000 in the number of mar ried men on supplementary benefit who have been out of work for more than a year. The number of their dependant children has gone up from 41,000 to an estimated 90,000. As the chart shows, the general labourers and unskilled workers who make up the great majority of the unemployed have a far higher proportion of long-term jobiess among them than do other occupations.

On the other hand the South east, where a quarter of all unemployed men live, has only 19 per cent of the hard core unemployed in this age group. East Anglia, the East Midlands, Vorkshire and Humanidania. Yorkshire and Humberside, and the South-west regions also have less than average longterm unemployment.

With the present depressed state of the labour market likely to continue for at least the next year the long-term unemployed stuck on the unemployment register for more than six months, will go on rising. New Australian sugar offer Tokyu, Oct 25.—Australian sugar aporters and Japanese refiners re closer to resolving their disrate over the long-term sugar upply contract, following a re-ised offer by the Australians, apanese sugar industry sources aid. It was quite possible a final greement could come by the end i this week.

The new offer lowers the fixed rice for a new four-year contract > $A414.50 a tomic, from the revious $A417, the sources said. his fixed price would be applied 75 per cent of the proposed round shipments of 600,000

nndes.
The Japanese are still at around \[\cdot \) 385 per ronne, but their position not inflexible, the sources said.

Gold gains slightly

Undecided at the outset yesterday the dollar picked up later to close higher against most currencies, partly on covering of oversold positions, and encouraged by a forecast of a slashed American trade deficit next year. Central banks' support was another factor in the raily.

The pound reached $1.775 before closing off the top at 1.7769 to the dollar, a gain of 24 points, while its effective level in the currency hasket at 62.5 (overnight 62.4) was the best since March this year, when the broader calculation was introduced.

Doalers noted some switching culation was introduced.

Doalers noted some switching out of Continentals into pounds in front of today's budget package, and also reported intermittent gask of England support for the dollar at the higher levels.

The mark was at 2.525 behind West Germany's latest trading surplus and following more gundesbank haying of dollars.

The yen started higher at 251.55 but drifted back to finish easier at 252.25 against 252.00 to the dollar on Monday night. In Tokyo, the Bank of Japan was reported as buying up to $100m to curb a fresh early advance by the yen.

Discount market

Heavy fax payments were mainly responsible for the neutre shortage of credit on Lombard Street yesterday. The Bank of England gave assistance on an exceptionally large scale, though this was probably overdoing things a little. The Bank bought an extremely large amount of Treasury bills and a small number of local anthority bills directly from the houses and also lent a moderate sum overnight to four or five houses at MLR (5 per cent). Some houses were able to take money at 4\cdot per cent but funds commanded 4\cdot 4\cdot per cent for most of the session. Final balances were taken at 4\cdot per for most of the session. Final balances were taken at 44 per cent, while overnight loans in the interbank market climbed to about 9 per cent.

Inflaned balances carried over from Monday provided the only favourable factor. Against the market was the very substantial excess of Revenue transfers to the Exchequer over Government disbursements, a rise in the note circulation and a very small amount still due on the call for Treasury 91 per cent, 1983.

New York, Oct 25.—New York stock prices closed slightly lower over a broad range. However, the Dow Jones industrial average railied in late trading to remain above the 800 level.

The index was off 0.78 point to 801.54. It was down more than seven points at its low for the season. Deckining issues overwhelmed gamers by about 1,150 to 320, akthough gainers were somewhat improving their position towards the close.

Brokers said like ministrial index was rescued from a close below 800 by short covering, bargain buying and some pre-plauned purchasing as it fell back to the 795 area.
